Learn by Doing

More than a motto, Poly students do it every day in many ways all over campus

By Maria T. Garcia and Amy Hooper
Staff Writers

Look around Cal Poly, and you'll find numerous examples of the university's motto, "learn by doing."

Throughout the campus, in all six colleges, students can apply their classroom knowledge to major-related activities.

College of Liberal Arts

Those kinds of opportunities are not limited to the colleges known for their technical emphases, as shown by the College of Liberal Arts.

While Dean Paul Zingg described the arts and sciences as "the foundation of any university worth its name, whether that be a polytechnic university or not," he conceded that the college doesn't "jump out at first glance" in this environment.

The college incorporates departments such as history, foreign languages, liberal studies, music, political science, and psychology and human development.

"But on closer look," Zingg said, "there are a number of outstanding technical programs and areas in liberal arts — for example, graphic communication, art and design, the technical writing program in the English department, journalism."

Zingg said the "learn by doing" motto applies to all of the college's programs.

But Zingg said he prefers another phrase.

"Active learning" doesn't have the technology-based baggage attached to it," he said. "It's a little more generic but basically means the same thing."

And as Zingg pointed out, some departments within the college do possess technical emphases, one of them being graphic communication.

Out of that department's resources of students and equipment operates University Graphic Systems.

Tina Hallstrom, a graphic communication senior, works as general manager of the student-run printing corporation.

"It's a quarter-million dollar company," she said.

"We print Mustang Daily, Cal Poly Today, the class schedule, (and) brochures for the clubs, sororities, fraternities."

While the student company is limited to on-campus customers, Hallstrom said it is in competition with local printers.

"We learn a lot about managing, trying to get jobs, being in competition with big-time printers," she said. "It's our money, and if we fail, it's our jobs."

Hallstrom said she started working for UGS as a freshman.

"I had no idea even what my major was about when I started this job," she said, "and it really helped me a lot. I got to get into it and see what it was all about."

College of Science and Mathematics

With a college that relies extensively on laboratories, Dean Philip Bailey said students regularly take part in hands-on learning.

The college includes the biological sciences, chemistry, mathematics, physical education and kinesiology, physics, and statistics departments.

Bailey said as students progress into second- and third-year labs, the amount of instrumentation increases while the degree of instruction from professors decreases.

"One of the things we do in the College of Science and Math, as we get into upper-division labs, is we try to cut back on the cookbook nature of it."

If students are told to purify a product, Bailey said, "they have to find the correct solvent, they have to know to heat it, they have to decide whether to decolorize it, all these kinds of things."

"Because of that, it develops a whole lot of independence."

Students can use that independence and initiative in conducting research for professors, such as Raul Cano.

"He isolated DNA from a 60 million-year-old bee entrapped in amber," Bailey said. "He's the first in the country to do such a thing."

As Cano works to isolate dinosaur DNA from dinosaur fossils, he and his student assistants are looking at two aspects.

"First of all," Cano said, "we're looking at the mechanisms that preserve DNA for such long periods of time. What are the characteristics of the molecule that make it withstand such long periods of dormancy?"

"Second, we're looking at ways of studying symbiotic relationships," he said, "so hopefully we can get some ideas of how to study parasitic relationships like malaria."

Biology senior Torey Arvik said he has worked with Cano for a year.

"The biggest thing has been working on the dinosaur bone we got from Montana, doing protein work on that, and helping Mary Schweitzer up in Montana work on her thesis on that."

Dawn Norton, a research assistant and Cal Poly graduate, runs the lab and has worked with Cano for a year.

"I was hired to do all the research supporting a grant that he has for the detection of listeria monocytogenes, a bacterium that contaminates dairy products," she said.

Norton said students of all class levels are generally welcome in Cano's lab as long as they show dedication and a real desire to learn.

But before students can work on Cano's top investigations, Norton said they will spend a couple quarters getting acclimated to the lab.

As Arvik said, "You've got to earn your wings, so to speak."

College of Business

Although the college recently reorganized, abolishing its five academic departments and replacing them with three service-oriented ones, some aspects remain the same.

These include the college's degree programs — primarily in accounting, business administration, economics, industrial technology and management — as well as its commitment to computer technology.

Dean Allen Haile said, "Our computer capabilities are far superior to most schools."

"(In addition), our faculty has weaved their use into the curriculum and into the classroom."

"It's our money, and if we fail, it's our jobs."

Tina Hallstrom
University Graphic Systems

Haile emphasized that business students will be computer literate in a number of different areas.

"When it comes to finding a job," he said, "it's one of the first things an employer looks for."

And in preparation for finding a job, many students embark on internships and cooperatives, opportunities to "learn by doing" that the college strongly encourages.

"I get calls every day from companies that want to get a student lined up for the following quarter," Haile said.

Stephen Hughes, cooperative education coordinator, said 172 College of Business students worked on co-ops during the last year.

Accounting senior Jeff Grossweiler was one of them.

In June, he returned from a co-op with Walt Disney Imagineering in Glendale.

For six months, Grossweiler worked as a financial analyst.

"I did research on the different costs the company is incurring and checked the financial statements of companies that were bidding to do work with Disney."

Grossweiler said he'd do it again and thinks everybody should do a co-op.

"I got a lot (out of it), especially the ability to get out there and actually see how things work."

The advantage to seeing "the big difference" between the academic and corporate worlds, Grossweiler said, is "you've seen how things work, so you can relate things better."

College of Architecture and Environmental Design

While on the campus, chances are you will come across the work of a student in the College of Architecture and Environmental Design at least once.

Poly Canyon serves as a prime example of "learn by doing," as do all three concrete signs at Cal Poly's main entrances.

And that learning takes places for all the college's students, whether they can design or build a structure, said Associate Dean Richard Zweifel.

"Our most dynamic resource is students and faculty who are interested in the world," he said. "A student can talk about an idea and then put it into a model or proposal."

The college includes the architectural engineering, architecture, city and regional planning, construction management, and landscape architecture departments.

Each major assumes the role of learning by doing, Zweifel said.

"It may mean pounding nails for a construction management student and attending meetings for a city and regional planning student," he said.

But in order for students to carry out their ideas, they must have the proper physical equipment.

To assist in that effort, the college maintains support facilities, one of which — the support shop — provides tools and materials for students, whether it be for classroom or personal use.

Architecture senior Lucilla Olkerill put the support shop to use in her second-year design class.

For an assignment, she and a group of classmates had to build a structure providing seats and shade for three to six people in Poly Canyon's Design Village.

"We (had to) go to the site to look at it and measure the slope, the sun angles," Olkerill said.

"We had to make our seating adjustable to the slopes, to the cracks in the ground, to hard soil or soft soil."

Olkerill said because many of the student had never built something, the experience was a real test.

"You see a lot of good designs but bad construction or very good construction but bad design," she said.

"Some people turned up with something really good. You could sit on it, and it wouldn't break!"

College of Agriculture

Students in the College of Agriculture live up to Cal Poly's motto on an everyday basis.

Poly athletics move on up

Distinguished programs enter Division I; some face bigger challenges than others

By Steve Chesterman
Staff Writer

This fall, Cal Poly athletics moves into Division I competition, leaving behind a tradition of excellence at the Division II level.

Cal Poly holds more NCAA titles in Division II than any school in history, with 36 team championships covering eight sports.

The Mustangs will compete in the four-member American West Conference along with Southern Utah, Sacramento State and Cal State Northridge.

Wrestling will continue to compete in the Pac-10 while the baseball team enters the Western Athletic Conference.

Athletic Director John McCutcheon sees the step up to Division I as more of a challenge to some programs than others.

"Several of our programs will have great success in the not-so-distant future," he said, citing track, baseball and softball, which have already competed against teams at the Division I level.

But, McCutcheon said, the biggest challenge faces basketball, as the Mustangs will be going against teams that have been playing all along at the Division I level.

huge jump."

Beason added that of the 27 games Cal Poly plays this season, 26 come against experienced Division I schools.

"We will be an underdog against all 26," he said. "But we don't intend to roll over for any of them."

The football team, however, should fare well according to McDowell, as 14 starters and 57 lettermen return to the field.

"With a new staff and a lot of talent at the skilled positions," he said, "football is going to be surprising."

American West Conference Commissioner Vic Buccola said it has been a good transition for Cal Poly going to the AWC in Division I football.

He said he anticipates the arrival of more sports into the conference.

"Based on the success (Cal Poly) has had in Division II, especially in cross country, track and tennis," Buccola said, "I think they're going to be a strong member of the American West Conference as we bring in the new sports of men's and women's basketball, cross country, track and tennis."

Cal Poly can learn from other universities whose athletic

Students rally for spirit, form Running Thunder

By Erika Eichler
Special to the Daily

Football rivals Stanford and Cal have an ax. Rutgers and Yale have a brown jug.

Cal Poly and Fresno State used to pass a bell back and forth between the winner of the annual game.

And this year, Running Thunder — a new spirit group — plans to ring the bell when Cal Poly scores touchdowns this season.

Based on the historical Rally Club, Running Thunder plans to revive some traditions and raise the spirit of Cal Poly athletics with the help of new underclassmen.

Natural resources management freshman Dave Reinhard helped get the group started and will serve as co-chair.

"It's a way for kids to get together and meet new people and get excited about something we have in common — our school."

Reinhard said the club's activities will start during the football season and continue through the school year.

Reinhard and other freshmen approached Interhall Council, the residence hall government body, in January 1994 to address the present lack of school spirit before the athletic programs moved to the Division I level of competition.

Soil science sophomore Steve McShane, president of Interhall Council at that time, liked the idea enough to get involved and become co-chair.

"Spirit was dead," he said. "In taking a closer look at our school and what it used to be, it was obvious something had to be done."

McShane said he was inspired while meeting with past Cal Poly football players at an alumni event.

"Hearing about a time when spirit was all that Cal Poly was about, it got me thinking," he said. "Everything was there for a spirit group to happen."

"There was just a need for coordination, a will and somebody to drive the group."

Reproduction Process Assistant Frank Kassak, an adviser to Running Thunder, was involved in the Rally Club in the 1980s.

"I got the tail end of it, so when Steve started asking around campus about the possibility of reviving that kind of organization, he was steered in my direction," Kassak said.

"For so many years, people come to Cal Poly, they're here for a weekend, and they don't even know there's a game going on," he said. "Why not get involved with being a Mustang?"

Kassak's previous spirit involvement allows him to pass on the old traditions, including the bell.

"At the time, we played Fresno State," Kassak said. "Depending on who won the bell, they would get to keep it for a year."

"It was quite a tradition," he said. "There were all kinds of pranks involving the bell. For example, fraternities would attempt to steal it."

For now, Running Thunder plans to keep the bell at Cal Poly.

Drive for diversity yields some gains

By Heather Clarke
Staff Writer

Blending in — there was a time when it was expected, what people wanted.

The country that once sought to become a "melting pot" has now adopted the metaphor of "a tossed green salad," with each ethnicity retaining its flavor.

Today, Cal Poly participates in a society that tries to emphasize the many colors that make up its population.

This fall, 32.8 percent of the student body identified itself as an ethnic group other than white.

That figure, more than double the percentage of non-white students on campus in fall 1983, is attributed to the 1986 Cal Poly Education Equity Plan.

Yet some people, including Cal Poly students, feel that filling ethnic quotas is wrong.

Home economics senior Nicole Ross said, "Being exposed to different cultures is important, but I don't agree in forcing ethnic mixing."

"I think it should happen naturally."

The university, however, is actively seeking to increase its ethnic mix.

"Right now the campus has a set goal," said Robert Koob, vice president for Academic Affairs. "We would like our student body to represent our state's population."

"By the year 2000, we would like the incoming classes to look like the high school graduating classes of California."

Despite all the efforts toward more diversity, statistics provided by Institutional Studies show the overall numbers of ethnic groups enrolled this fall have gone down slightly compared to those of fall 1993.

Fewer American Indians, blacks, Chicanos, other Hispanics and Filipinos enrolled fall quarter.

But the percentage of enrolled Asians and American Indians increased, as did those who gave no response.

But, Koob said, despite Cal Poly's goal, the outcome depends on those ethnic students who are accepted by the university.

"We accommodate students according to our goal," he said. "If accepted students decide to go here, then the numbers will go up."

"If they choose to go elsewhere, the numbers will go down. We really have no control of that."

Yet the strive towards diversity doesn't just lie in the admissions numbers.

Last year, the university introduced a new option for incoming students: a multicultural residence hall.

Kevin Rome, educational and training specialist for Residential Life and Education, said Yosemite Hall, once again the designated hall, is already full this fall.

"It is intended to educate and inform students on multicultural and ethnic issues," he said. "It is made to make the students feel more comfortable, to learn and share from each other."

"Sometimes we have to take note that not all students are comfortable moving into a completely new environment," Rome said. "With this residence hall, we are trying to meet their needs."

Student clubs and organizations also represent an opportunity for students to meet their needs. More than 30 groups are geared towards ethnic identity, including the Afro American Student Union, the Native American Student Organization and the Portuguese Cultural Network.

The Multicultural Center, located in the University Union, stresses cultural diversity and offers activities, exercises and interactions dealing with heritage and ethnicity.

The center's director Everardo Martinez-Inzunza, also serves as Cal Poly's Coordinator for Multicultural Programs and Services.

"The center acts as a programmer for ethnic promotions," he said. "We work with and assist the ethnic organizations on campus."

Martinez-Inzunza said the center has many plans this fall.

"We are currently working on starting a newsletter of all the cultural activities for the Central Coast," he said. "It will be called Culture Lines."

"We're starting a new ethnic leadership structure made of four ethnic commissions, including African American, Latin American, Native American and Asian Pacific American."

Martinez-Inzunza said the commissions will meet every two weeks to talk about the newsletter and the center.

He added, "I would like to see the Multicultural Center begin to blend Cal Poly resources and activities with San Luis Obispo's (and) make an ethnic program for the community, the students and the faculty."

Martinez-Inzunza doesn't stand alone in the belief that more attention should be geared towards faculty.

William Little, chair of the Foreign Languages and Literatures department and chair of the Humanities Program, agreed.

"The school is definitely showing improvement as far as diversity is concerned," he said, "but we are far from okay."

"I think serious recruitment of minority faculty members is needed," Little said. "Having an ethnically diverse faculty would help with students' comfort level."

"I think that when Cal Poly was much more of a white campus, the population was cheated of an education," he said.

"Being diverse, we have a lot to learn from each other."

Performing Arts Center construction fills venue gap between S.F. and L.A.

Central Coast and Cal Poly to benefit from new facility's versatility

By Cordelia Rackley
Staff Writer

It's going to be big — the Performing Arts Center, that is.

Harry Sharp, associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts said of the structure, "It will be the premiere performance facility between San Francisco and Los Angeles."

Passersby and motorists on Grand Avenue are already gawking at the towering structure.

Sharp likened the building of the center to constructing a colossal musical instrument.

The 91,500-square-foot facility will include a main performance hall with 1,500 seats on three levels to maximize the acoustical environment, nearly dwarfing the adjacent 500-seat capacity of the Cal Poly Theatre.

"Every day as the steel goes up and one can see how large it is, it's becoming more and more exciting to see this tremendous effort come to being," said Glenn Irvin, associate vice president for Academic Affairs.

Features of the new center include a thrust stage that rises up from the orchestra pit.

The back of the stage can accommodate an orchestra shell that reflects sound.

A performance and rehearsal pavilion will accommodate between 250 and 300 seats, and included in the plans is a 175-seat classroom that can also be used for intimate performances.

A grand lobby containing technical support systems and architectural features will be suitable for banquets, receptions, conferences and art exhibitions.

Warm-up rooms and control booths; large dance, music and theater rehearsal studios; storage areas and equipment for hearing impaired are also included in the plans.

"I believe it's going to be the cultural hub of San Luis Obispo County."

Jim Jamieson,
Foundation for the Performing Arts Center

"I think (it) is going to be one of three architectural landmarks here."

Glenn Irvin,
Associate Vice President for Academic Affairs

Irvin compared the center's grandiose architectural design to that of two other prominent buildings on the Central Coast.

"I think the Performing Arts Center is going to be one of three architectural landmarks here," he said. "The other two are the mission and Hearst Castle.

"Many of the creative aspects of (both of those buildings) are also a valuable part of the new center."

The center is scheduled to open in fall 1996.

The effort to build a performing arts center for the residents of San Luis Obispo was spearheaded by The Foundation for the Performing Arts Center.

Joining the project's funding, the City of San Luis Obispo and Cal Poly assisted the Foundation in providing $30 million to design, construct and equip the facility.

The Foundation is also raising endowment funds to help operate the center once it opens.

"I believe it's going to be the cultural hub of San Luis Obispo County," said Jim Jamieson, executive director for the Foundation for the Performing Arts Center.

"It's a tremendous asset to the performing arts groups in the area, many of which have supported us through their surcharges."

By its second year, the Performing Arts Center could expect to accommodate 52 performances and have at least 30 uses for conferences, lectures and meetings, and have 83,000 people attending its events.

These are conservative figures, however, according to a feasibility study conducted by a local firm.

"The number of touring performances could double with aggressive promotion and booking,"

A passerby on Grand Avenue compared the construction equipment to a giant Erector Set. Construction is scheduled to end by 1996 / Photo by Amy Hooper the study said.

While most performances in the center will benefit the university and the community, the community is guaranteed a minimum of one-third use of the facility, according to the Foundation for the Performing Arts Center.

A non-profit public benefit corporation and the center's manager will oversee operations of the center.

"It's going to be a tremendous cultural and economical boost to the community," Irvin said.

"It already has been a tremendous effort of cooperation between the cities and county of San Luis Obispo and the university."

"That spirit is embedded in the very foundation of this building."

Extra poundage awaits unexpected students

By Junious Burrage
Staff Writer

The college experience is a time of learning, growing, and changing.

But unfortunately for many, changes occur in the waistline, too.

Gaining weight is a natural occurrence as one matures; however, healthy eating habits and a positive life-style can slow the process down.

Dubbed "The Freshman 15" by many upperclassmen, weight gain most commonly occurs in the first quarter of the freshman year.

"The fall quarter is when many students come in with concerns about their weight," said Joan Cirone, head of nursing services at Cal Poly's Health Center, said.

Cirone said students are more apt to ditch the eating habits developed at home once they arrive on campus.

"The students are on their own when they get here," she said. "Their parents aren't here to make decisions for them."

Although campus dining and food services offer an extensive menu with high nutritional values, Cirone said there are many foods available high in fat and calories but low in nutritional content.

"We suggest that students make a mental assessment of their daily food intake to evaluate if their eating habits are good or bad," she said.

Cirone stated that free health education programs are available at the Health Center.

Nutrition and wellness life-style make up two of the four categories of programs, the others being sexuality and alcohol and drug abuse.

"We welcome anyone who has concerns to come in for one-on-one counseling," Cirone said.

She stressed that students should not wait too long if they feel they need help.

"The fall quarter is when many students come in with concerns about their weight."

Joan Cirone,
Health Center

"Don't let bad habits get entrenched" she said. "We are here to help."

Cirone said one in four women develop eating disorders.

"It's an issue that concerns us here," she said.

Cirone said students with eating disorders should contact Psychological Services.

Joe Diaz, a counselor for Psychological Services, said there are specific symptoms students should look for if they think someone they know has an eating disorder.

He said bingeing and purging, obsessive concern about weight or constant overeating are some fundamental warning signals.

"Look at how the person uses food," he said. "If it's abusive, they could have a problem."

Adjusting to new roommates presents often stressful transition to college

By Brooke Richardson
Staff Writer

College — it represents most individuals' first time on their own, semi-free from parents' and others' control.

But just as many are getting away from some of the constraints of home, they're getting into something that can be better or worse, depending on how it is handled.

Life with a roommate.

Welcome to the residence halls.

As much as the first quarter of college is about adjusting to classes and a new way of studying, it is also about adjusting to an unfamiliar roommate.

It's about learning to sleep through someone else's alarm, dealing with someone else's idea of housekeeping, and listening to music that one may not like but the roomie does.

It's about compromise, and it's not always easy.

In fact, there is even a booklet to help new "dormies" adjust to their roommates which can be picked up when checking into the residence halls.

"(It's important) to just really be intentional about setting up a good relationship with your roommate," said Carole Schaffer, assistant director of housing for Residential Life and Education. "That's what we're hoping to get at with the brochure."

Because, as many veterans of the dorms know and the brochure said, "Your relationship with your roommate becomes a critical element in your success."

The brochure starts off with beginnings to sentences to be completed by roommates.

Some seem rather silly and hopefully obvious like, "My name is . . ." while others may help open up serious communication about things that could take a whole year to learn on one's own such as, "I let others know I am angry by . . ."

The booklet goes on to list the rights of a roommate, how to be a good roommate and hints for resolving roommate disagreements.

There is also a contract that can be filled out to deal with things that can frequently cause problems between roommates including cleaning, use of possessions (borrowing and loaning), study time and guests.

But with or without the contract and the booklet, there are things roommates should do to help make their dorm room a pleasant place to be.

"I think being respectful, talking and communicating (are important)," Schaffer said.

Communication can also help when students with roommate problems talk to outside sources.

"We want to encourage students to notice that there are differences and to confront the problem using an R.A. or a counselor," said Joe Diaz, a counselor at Psychological Services.

"We want students not to hold back," he said, "but to seek some help, to process what they're feeling."

Diaz added students may encounter problems with roommates who have different value systems.

Problems commonly begin with differences in cleanliness, See ROOMMATES, page 39

On September 17, We Will Be Testing Our Early Warning System Sirens.

On Saturday, September 17, the San Luis Obispo County Early Warning System sirens will be tested to make certain they are in proper working order. The sirens will sound twice – at noon and again about 30 minutes later. The sirens will sound for about five minutes each time.

This is a test and does not require any action on your part.

If you hear the sirens sound at any other time, there may be an emergency in your area.

Turn on the radio immediately to either 920 AM, 1400 AM, or 98.1 FM. These San Luis Obispo radio stations and other area Emergency Broadcast System stations will broadcast essential emergency information and instructions on what you should do.

Remember,
however,

Saturday, September 17. It is only a test.

Kennedy Library at cutting edge

Computers make Cal Poly's facility technologically advanced

By Amy Hooper
Editor in Chief

The gray concrete building that houses the Robert F. Kennedy Library may look intimidating.

But inside, it contains access to myriad electronic databases and a reference staff dedicated to helping students find the information they need.

English senior Kristin Davis used the staff's assistance to her advantage for her job as a grader.

"It appeared that one of the students plagiarized," she said.

Reference Librarian Wayne Montgomery helped Davis look up bibliographical citations with MELVYL, the online catalog for the University of California system.

Davis said using MELVYL was "not at all" difficult. Such a database allows students to find and obtain resources unavailable at Cal Poly's library.

Interlibrary Loan, composed of a network between various libraries, allows students to order articles and books that Cal Poly's library does not have.

After providing bibliographical information, students then wait for Interlibrary Loan to find a library with the cited work and to obtain Xerox copies of the desired information.

"If I want to do the legwork rather than putting the burden on Interlibrary Loan, it's kind of helpful," Davis said.

"You can actually bring up articles and excerpts," she said. "That way, you don't waste your time or Interlibrary Loan's time."

"It's nice to be able to access

(the information) through the database," she said.

MELVYL is not the only online resource available to students.

Through MUSTANG, the university's server, students can retrieve information from:

- Polycat, Kennedy Library's online card catalog
- Library of Congress
- Expanded Academic Index
- Avery Index to Architectural Periodicals, and many other resources.

In addition, students can use MEDLINE, the online equivalent to Index Medicus, a compendium of world literature in medicine; CARL, the Colorado Alliance of Research Libraries system which offers various databases including UnCover; and Lexis-Nexis, a conglomerate of current events, business and law databases.

The latter service, however, requires previous training and a certification card.

And students are not limited to using Polycat and MUSTANG in the library, as both systems can be used through a computer modem.

Hand-outs at the library, which explain how to find everything, play a crucial role, according to Associate Dean Ilene Rockman.

"We have tried to simplify access," she said. "What we have done here is a model for other libraries."

"We really are trying to make everything menu-driven and as accessible as possible."

Reference Department Head Paul Adalian Jr. seconded Rockman's high opinion of the library's gopher system, MUSTANG.

Student Academic Services can lend a hand

By Ajay Bhamhani
Staff Writer

If you need to polish your study skills, don't hesitate to take advantage of Cal Poly's Academic Skills Center.

A program of Student Academic Services, the center offers one-on-one advising with students to improve study skills as well as study skills seminars and supplemental instruction for certain classes.

"We do the study skills advising for generally anyone who walks in the door," said Patricia Stewart, an academic adviser.

She said one-on-one advising consists of a student and a counselor discussing certain skills which can improve the student's weak areas.

These areas include time management, test preparation, test-taking, procrastination, concentration, motivation, reading rate, reading comprehension, notetaking and listening, textbook reading, memory skills, spelling improvement and vocabulary enrichment.

"The first session can last anywhere between 40 to 50 minutes," Stewart said. "It's really to get a feel of what the student is having difficulty with, and it's important for them to articulate that."

Study skills seminars, which also address those areas, will begin the third week of the quarter.

"Seminars are good for people who don't want to admit they need help," Stewart said.

Environmental engineering junior Bransby Whitton said he saw his study skills improve greatly after he attended a seminar last year.

"I learned how to manage my time better and prevent stress," Whitton said. "I was able to learn more in a less amount of time when I studied."

The center also offers a supplemental instruction program for students who are not interested in general education classes, she said.

A student enrolled in a GE classes will be assigned a supplemental instruction leader who has taken the class before and performed well in it.

Stewart said the leader will attend every class lecture in addition to reading the textbook and then conduct a series of weekly review sessions for students in the class.

During the meetings, notes will be compared, important concepts will be discussed, study strategies will be developed, and practice tests will be given.

Studies by the Academic Skills Center show that students who participate in the program earn a half to a full grade above class members who don't.

Electrical engineering senior Davin Oishi said he attended a seminar last spring to improve his reading skills.

"I used (the center) to improve my reading rate and my comprehension rate," Oishi said. "I can read faster while under-

Beach towns offer escape

Cambria, Cayucos, Avila Beach present sand, surf, shops

By Brooke Richardson
Staff Writer

Here's some advice for all of those new students who've never heard of Cambria or "old" students who've never been there: Go.

Cambria is a little seaside community of 5,500 located about 45 minutes north of San Luis Obispo on Highway 1.

The drive seems like a snap though, as you cruise by the Pacific Ocean, past little places like Harmony — a town that you can't miss — which started off as a pottery factory and now sports a few shops, a nice restaurant and a population of something like 18.

Cambria is a bit more bustling than Harmony.

Main Street is full of little shops selling gourmet foods, crafts, jewelry and bric-a-brac, art galleries and restaurants — including Main St. Grill, which fires up the outdoor barbecue on the weekends.

The town has just the right balance so that you don't feel like you're walking through the same store over and over again.

But probably the best part of the town and shops is the people.

Friendly and talkative are probably the best ways to describe the town's inhabitants. The owner of Paws on Main was able to sweet-talk me into spending $18.50 on stamps and pens (both of which I didn't need).

And this willingness to chat is undeniable if you bring up the subject of the town itself.

Jo Mazzeo works at Cambria County Baskets on Main Street.

She first came to Cambria in the late '60s when her daughter and son-in-law, both Cal Poly students, brought her and her husband to see it.

"It stole our hearts," she said. "We fell in love with the place and bought some property."

The couple retired to Cambria years later, just like many others.

"There are lots of retired artists and gifted writers here," Mazzeo said. "It's the ideal area for them to retire in."

That is probably due to the town's location — at the southern end of the Monterey Pine Forest and right next to Moonstone Beach, where the sand is dark and clean and the water is a deep blue-green.

"It's kind of like being at the mountains (when you're) at the beach," said David Craig, a realtor in town.

He said one of the reasons the town is so friendly is probably because a large portion of the residents are escapees from other areas, like himself.

"Almost nobody's actually stuck here," he said. "Most people here are from someplace else."

"It makes it a little less seaside villages dotting the Central Coast have lost.

"It's the cheapest form of paradise anywhere," said Joshua Jeschien, head cook at The Seahouse Restaurant.

"I've been living here for over 15 years and don't plan on leaving anytime soon."

In fact, longtime residents of Cayucos are commonly referred to as "Cayucos Lifers," an honor every resident seems to strive for.

"It takes a long time to earn 'local status' here," said Jerry Funderberg, owner of Cayucos' only barber shop.

"I've been here about three years and am still considered somewhat of a new resident," he said.

Developed in 1867 by Captain James Cass under the original Rancho Moro Y Cayucos Spanish Land Grant, Cayucos took its name from the Native Chumash Indians' word for canoe.

It was once known for its excellent shipping port and major exporter of dairy products, hides, beef, and fresh water.

Cayucos residents now affectionately refer to it as the "antique capitol of the Central Coast."

With seven antique stores and many sidewalk craft vendors, Cayucos offers the tourist and weekend traveler a relaxed atmosphere in a nostalgic setting.

With breathtaking views of Morro Rock and surrounding

"It's the cheapest form of paradise anywhere. I've been living here for over 15 years and don't plan on leaving anytime soon."

Joshua Jeschien

Cook, The Seahouse Restaurant

areas and its own special climate that escapes the thick fog other Central Coast beaches don't, Cayucos somehow has eluded the claws of commercialism and remains one of the authentic beach towns left in California.

Although tourism plays an important role in the seaside community, residents seem to have no ambitions of further growth.

Most are content with the high quality of life Cayucos offers and hope they can keep their hidden gem a secret for generations to come.

NOTICE TO ALL CAL POLY STUDENTS:

POLITICAL SCIENCE PROFESSOR AND CITY COUNCILMAN ALLEN SETTLE IS RUNNING FOR MAYOR OF SAN LUIS OBISPO.

He has long promoted student involvement in local government. Not surprisingly, he is endorsed by the 1992 council candidate and Cal Poly graduate Brent Petersen who says:

"There may not be any other single person who has devoted more of his time and energies in the concrete furtherance of student interests and concerns than Allen."

The obvious importance of all students to the prosperity of SLO has historically been ignored by many, and so as a recent former student I am excited to give my 100% support to the one individual whom has all my trust and confidence for the demanding job ahead."

Dear Student,

My name is Pat Veesart and I am running for City Council. Two years ago, I supported a young Cal Poly student who ran for this office. He and I shared the same values, and that is why I was proud to be one of the first people in this city to openly endorse his candidacy.

ELECT PAT VEE Sart
CITY COUNCIL

I will never forget that we came within 100 votes of electing Brent Petersen to the City Council. I will also never forget how his opponents retaliated by trying to take away your constitutional right to vote in this city with a bogus lawsuit.

I am proud of my friendship with Brent Petersen and the work that we started. As your councilman, I promise to continue:

- Working to expand our job base with quality, sustainable growth, while maintaining the small-town atmosphere of San Luis Obispo.
- Protecting the subsidy to keep city bus service free for students and faculty and building new bike lanes to create safe, inexpensive transportation options.

- Putting a healthy environment first because that is the basis of our strong economy, community well-being, and future.

- Working for honesty and integrity in a city government that is accessible to all residents, both young and old.

Welcome back, Cal Poly.

COLLEGES

You can find them in the dairy unit or out doing research in Chorro Creek.

"We want students to go out and see what their job will be like once they graduate," said Associate Dean Walter Mark.

With more than 40 clubs associated with the college, students have numerous occasions to do just that.

In addition to the clubs, students can participate in enterprise projects, for which the university gives them land and a loan to pay for gardening.

Last spring, crop science students grew broccoli as part of an enterprise project.

The high quality of the broccoli led to its export to Japan.

Students also sell their produce locally at Farmers Market.

"It is an opportunity for students to learn about the real world, from decision making, marketing, developing budgets to working in groups," Mark said.

"Everyone can get involved," he said. "Enterprise projects are 100-level courses where the student receives credit and a share of the profits."

Mark said dairy management students are excited about a new project, in which Cal Poly cheese is expected to be in the market during fall quarter.

"Our students grow the feed for the cows, they milk the cows, and (they) produce the cheese," he said.

Although agribusiness senior Wendy Reis is not directly involved in the cheese project, her job taking care of the calves may play a future role.

Reis helps feed the calves and clean out the calving hutches that sprout from behind the Dairy Science Instructional Center.

Reis, who grew up on a cattle ranch, got involved with the calves through her husband.

"He's from a dairy," she said. "I figured I already knew everything about beef cattle, so I might as well learn about the dairy aspect."

Although she does not plan to go into the dairy business, Reis said she considers the job part of her education.

And working with the calves has proven to be challenge at times.

"You have to have a lot of patience, kinda like kids, especially when you have their milk," Reis said.

"They'll knock you around, wrap their chain around your legs and trip you."

College of Engineering

"Cal Poly is the largest undergraduate engineering college in the Western United States."

And Associate Dean Dan Walsh is proud to say it.

The focus on undergraduate engineering and hands-on laboratory exposure is a signature of the College of Engineering, he said.

"It is different because it is harder, but it is also enjoyable," Walsh said. "We employ the eyes, ears, and hands approach."

That approach encompasses the college's aeronautical engineering, civil and environmental engineering, computer engineering, computer science, electronic and electrical engineering, engineering science, industrial and manufacturing engineering, materials engineering and mechanical engineering departments.

"We want students to deeply understand what they read in textbooks," he said. "And you do that only with hands-on experience."

That hands-on experience See COLLEGES, page 35

Dear Student:

As an alumni of California's University system, I know the importance of quality education, and what we must do to ensure that our colleges and universities continue to stay on the cutting edge of technology. As your assemblyman, I promise to fight for:

- Making education our top priority in Sacramento once again. We need to ensure that our tax dollars go toward expanding our school systems instead of our prison systems.
- Establishing a research park in conjunction with the university in order to provide quality jobs and hands-on training.
- Stopping the rampant escalation of tuition fees that are being charged to our students. It's time to stop balancing the state budget on the backs of our children.

Your vote counts! Join me in fighting for a legislature that works for all Californians. Remember to register to vote before October 8th.

Sincerely,

John Ashbaugh

leads many students to participate in various projects, including the creation of the human-powered helicopter.

Cal Poly students were the first to sustain flight with human power, Walsh said.

The creation of the Hybrid Electric Vehicle also serves as an illustration of hands-on learning.

Mechanical engineering graduate student Eric Boettcher supervised the engineering of the vehicle, beginning in 1992.

"It is an electric vehicle with an additional power unit to extend its range," he said, "and we included a gas engine into the vehicle."

The two-passenger car — powered by batteries, a gas engine and a motor — was created from the ground up with student labor.

"A bunch of wacky students, volunteering all their time, managed to create a car," Boettcher said.

"How many other engineers, period, can say they built a car, without going to work for Ford or one of those other guys?"

Boettcher said he takes pride in the fact that Cal Poly students performed all the work in the HEV's creation. "In our case, we made everything. We made our own body, our own frame and everything else in between."

"I think everyone got a good experience from that."

ATHLETICS

programs have already made the move to Division I.

Sacramento State's baseball and softball programs entered Division I in 1990 and completed the long transition with the entrance of the Hornet football program in 1993.

Sacramento State Athletic Director Lee McElroy said attitude plays a big part during the transition into Division I.

"It's so much an attitude of wanting to maintain excellence," he said.

"Opponents see you as the new kid on the block and come to get you," said McElroy. "The intensity level of the competition is much greater."

"Opponents see you as the new kid on the block and come to get you."

Lee McElroy

Sac State Athletic Director

Cal Poly football opens up the 1994 campaign Sept. 10 at Eastern Washington and returns to Mustang Stadium Sept. 17 for a contest against Humboldt State at 6 p.m.

On a side note, according to McDowell, members of the Big West Conference expansion committee will tour Cal Poly Sept. 6-7 as one of four schools the conference is looking to add to compete in all sports.

McDowell said it would be tremendous news for all sports if an invitation is extended to Cal Poly for the 1996-97 athletic year.

"To be able to get into the Big West in only our third year in Division I would be an incredible feat," he said. "We're all putting our best foot forward."

McDowell added that if Cal Poly moves to the Big West Conference, it would be without the football team who plays in the AWC and the wrestling team. a member of the Pac-10.

THUNDER

Other traditions include the wooden "C," "P" and "V" carried up onto the Poly "P" hill. During football games, the "C" and "P" were lit up with light bulbs, powered by a generator behind the residence halls. When Cal Poly won, the "V" was also lit up to announce the victory.

"There was also a canon in the northeast end of the stadium," Kassak said, "and when (the team would) score a touchdown, (the Rally Club would) throw a canon."

McShane said when Running Thunder gets on its feet, the group plans to make themselves known at sports games.

"First of all, as far as next year goes, we're hoping to have an actual section where we can dress alike and root alike," he said.

Assistant Director of Alumni Relations Ben Beasley is also an adviser to the group.

"At this point," he said, "I'm not trying to tie the alumni into the club. I'm trying to get the student body involved."

"We're going to start with the freshmen," Beasley said, "because it's hard to teach people that have been on campus two or three years to change their pride in the campus."

McShane agreed, saying, "Freshmen and sophomores are the new beginning to our future."

"Unless they are brought into this idea of pride and enthusiasm for Cal Poly, they are going to go through school just like everybody else."

"I'm very excited," he said. "I envision any number of people coming together to produce just contagious unstoppable spirit in the stands. I want to see enthusiasm for our school."

ROOMMATES

homesickness, and study strategies.

"Some personalities just don't match," Diaz said.

If the roommate problems are overwhelming, one is not necessarily stuck, even though the residence halls are full this fall.

"(If there's a problem), the first step would be to talk to the resident adviser," Schaffer said. "If necessary, the coordinator of student development can get involved."

"(But even with this help), if students are saying, 'No, I can't handle this,' we can help facilitate room trades," she said.

However, this is usually the last step to resolve roommate disputes.

In most cases, the R.A.s and coordinators of student development try to help compromise or resolve their differences.

Rene Navarra, an R.A. for Sierra Madre Tower 0 during summer quarter, said, "Basically we just listen."

"Depending on the nature of the problem, we talk to (the roommates)," she said, "and (we may) send them to the C.S.D."

But, she said, "(But) we help them try to work it out themselves."

Navarra said the most important thing to maintain while living in the residence halls is "an open mind to other kinds of people."

Schaffer concurred, saying, "Part of the college experience is learning to deal with other people who are not like you."

All this and school, too.

Who ever said that college wasn't work?

SERVICES

standing more than I used to be able to."

Disabled Student Services also offers assistance to physically disabled students and those with learning disabilities.

The program also provides help for students who are temporarily disabled.

"Most students don't take advantage of the services we provide for someone who breaks their leg or something," said Sandy Diaz, a DSS employee.

She said students who feel they may have a learning disability but have never been diagnosed with one are encouraged to talk with Ken Chep, the learning disability specialist.

Services provided by DSS include tram services, notetakers, accommodated testing, a tutor program, academic advising, an interpreter for hearing-impaired students, a computer lab and a peer-mentor program.

"The peer-mentor program is designed for new students and run by students who have been a part of DSS for a couple of years," Stewart said.

Assistance from Student Academic Services also includes the Educational Opportunity Program, the Minority Engineering Program and Student Support Services.

LIBRARY

TANG.

"It's one of the best in the country," he said. "They have it here so you can go to other gophers around the country, and there's not one that's as comprehensive as ours."

That aspect has attracted users throughout the world, Adalian said.

"Last winter, we had a big run of people from Finland, calling into Cal Poly," he said. "We had people from Eastern Europe, China and Germany."

And because Cal Poly included UnCover — a database in which 14,000 magazines are organized on the basis of their titles — in its gopher for free, users from around the globe took advantage of the service.

Adalian said the university then "passworded" UnCover to regain access for students.

"Quite a few people e-mailed us, saying, 'How dare you cut this off from us!'"

Adalian cited the incident as an example of the global village.

"People far away are getting to us very quickly," he said.

And the library staff said they hope students who are right here will take advantage of the services available to them.

Wanda Fong, a food science graduate now looking for permanent employment, said she wishes she had used the facilities sooner.

Fong said she was pleased with the help she received from the Career Services staff regarding her resume and cover letter.

"And definitely don't wait until you are a senior."

The experience Shibata referred to is that gained through summer jobs related to a student's major.

According to Shibata, co-ops are full-time, paid professional positions that last between three to six months.

Internships, usually part-time and unpaid positions, usually last less than six months, he said. Some internships are assignment based, meaning a student will be given a topic to research.

Academic departments decide which of the two they will accept for academic credit, and some have both.

Shibata said Career Services lists only co-ops because the staff works closely with employers to set standards for students and employers to follow.

Shibata also advised students to balance course work with part-time work.

"The hours a student can work pretty much depend on that student's study habits," he said.

Students in all majors and at all class levels can find part-time work listings on a job board with various categories.

Those job sections include New Today, Miscellaneous, Childcare/Pre-School, On-Campus, Clerical/Bookkeeping, Hotel/Restaurant, Retail/Sales, Housecleaning/Personal Services, Landscape/Yardwork and Work Study.

Shibata said Work Study jobs, open to students who have received Federal Work Study awards through Financial Aid, require students to take the award letter to the employer to verify eligibility for Work Study.

In addition to job listings, Career Services provides counselors to help students with resumes, cover letters and a career development plan.

Available on an appointment-only basis, the career counselors represent all academic colleges.

Computer science junior Juan Hernandez said he visits the Career Services office when he needs extra money.

"I come in to check for temporary work, jobs with no commitment."

Hernandez said he began visiting the office during his sophomore year to look for jobs. Since then, he has received help with his resume.

"I'll be ready when it comes time for co-ops and internships," he said. "I'll know what questions potential employers will ask me."

Hernandez said job fairs and career symposiums offer opportunities to prepare students for "the real world."

"Find out what corporate America wants you to know," he said. "That way, (you) can find out what classes to take."

Raise money for your favorite school, church or non-profit group 365 days a year! Unlike other fundraising programs in the area, this one is easy. It's the Scolari's Friendship Fund and it involves saving your Scolari's receipts and turning them into your favorite charity.

The charity can then turn the receipts into the Scolari's Friendship Fund for a 1% cash donation. The money can be used for anything from purchasing sports equipment, computers and school books to just about any good thing you can imagine.

For more information on the Friendship Fund, come into Scolari's or call (805) 481-5779.

One local hot-spot students quickly discover is Avila Beach, located south of San Luis Obispo near the Diablo Canyon Nuclear Power Plant.

"It's a great place to get away and relieve some of the stress that builds up," said Randy Michealson, a resident of Avila Beach.

"I see a lot of Cal Poly students here on the weekends, usually hanging out at the beach."

Besides a beautiful beach, the town is filled with small tourist shops, restaurants and resorts.

Those who want to swing some iron can play at the Avila Beach Golf Course, an 18-hole public facility.

"It's a great place to get away and relieve some of the stress that builds up."

Randy Michealson
Avila Beach resident

"I love playing golf at Avila," said Scott Wallace, a mechanical engineering senior.

"It's a really good course for a beginner like me," he said, "and it's relatively affordable for the average college student."

For a pampering experience, try the massage therapy at the Sycamore Mineral Springs Resort.

The treatment includes a half hour in the private outdoor mineral spas. It's also fun to go hot tubbing with friends.

Electronic engineering senior Darrin Chin said he enjoys spending time at the mineral spas.

"Me and my girlfriend love going there to relax and get away from everything," Chin said.

Featured restaurants within the beach community include The Old Custom House, Fat Cats and The Gardens of Avila.

The Old Custom House, a grill-type restaurant, serves breakfast, lunch, and dinner daily.

Fat Cats, a 24-hour cafe, serves breakfast, lunch, and dinner and overlooks Port San Luis Harbor.

The Gardens of Avila, located at Sycamore Mineral Springs Resort, features seafood, chicken, pasta and salads.

Another attraction near Avila is Paradise Sport Fishing on Pier 3 at Port San Luis.

If you get tired of trying to catch salmon and albacore, you can go whale watching on chartered boats. It also offers a live bait and tackle shop and rental equipment.

"It's a really good (golf) course for a beginner like me, and it's relatively affordable for the average college student."

If none of these attractions appeal, sunbathing and playing in the sand remain tried-and-true pastimes.

Ashish Arya, a biology senior, said he enjoys going to the beach at night.

"Avila is a great place to go with friends and build a bonfire," he said.
